

Celebrate and Learn More about WSU's efforts related to youth prevention research and intervention

The Wichita State University Interest Group on Youth Prevention Research & Intervention invites you to a special event to recognize and discuss youth prevention research and intervention efforts by WSU faculty and staff working in collaboration with the community.

The special event will feature a brief presentation by and discussion with Trish Self, PhD who has been a key leader in developing an interdisciplinary screening team for early identification of children on the Autism Spectrum.

In addition, attendees will have the opportunity to explore the Wichita State University Evelyn Hendren Cassat Speech-Language-Hearing (SLH) Clinic which is dedicated to providing speech, language, and hearing services for the greater Wichita area.

Attendees from a wide variety of disciplines will have the opportunity to discuss collaborative projects that are in progress and potential initiatives that may be realized with the support of resources available through the SLH clinic, which provides client services in the context of the academic programs and research activities of the Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders.

Please consider celebrating and learning more about some of WSU's efforts related to youth prevention research and intervention. Please RSVP by contacting Candy Youle at 978-3327 or candace.youle@wichita.edu

Where: Wichita State University Eugene M. Hughes Metropolitan Complex, Room 185, 5015 E. 29th Street

When: Friday, November 4th at 3:30

What: Event to highlight and discuss Youth Prevention Research and Intervention. Refreshments provided.